Hayes and Johnny Walker, for £400.

(Chough his scientific acquirements are of a somewhat different character, and his qualifications savor more of activity than bodily strength.) possessing equal claims to be dubbed out and out the best general of his time, to be dubbed out and out the best general of his time, which is the present.

THE FIGHT.

Round 1. The men stood a few seconds eyeing one another tile a couple of hawks. Each was evidently anxious, but both were unwilling to make the first move. Walker, after a little dodging, crept close and tried it on with his left, but found fill armed at all points, and the attempt was therefore unsuccessful. Bill now made a kry with his left, and every one thought it was going home, but walker stopped it beautifully when close to his dial. An exciting and elegant display of science now took place on both sides, each alternately advancing first on one site, and then walking round and having a say on the other tack, but neisher could find an opening. For four minutes did this display last amidst breathless silence. At last Bill saw the glimmer of an opening, let go his left, and just reached Johnny's larboard listener. Johnny, in return, just reached Hill's bread-basket, and slipped down. The science displayed in this round elicited unbounded applause. As a specimen of defensive factics it was perfection.

2. Walker very soon led off both right and left but leance. At last Bill saw the glimmer of an opening, let go his lett, and just resched Johny's larboard listener. Johnsy, in return, just reached Bill's bread-basket, and stipped down. The science displayed in this round elicited unbounded applause. As a specimen of defensive factics it was perfection.

2. Walker very soon led off both right and left, but the stoppe was put on him. Bill then made play, but was likewise frustrated in his object; both smilet and noded at each other, and in sparring appeared not in the least inclined to give a chance away. After many vain attempts on both sides to get a little one in, Bill managed to get his lett slightly en to Johnny's neck, who returned the compliment by extching Bill on the shoulder, when they closed, and after some slight exchanges Bill stipped down.

3. More cautious sparring for some time, and both acxiously waiting for a chance. Johnny, however, was first to lead off with his left at Billy's disk; the latter stopped it elegantly and broze sway. Mutual fernts were made for an opening, but ooth were on the alert. Bill poised himself on his left foot ready for a shoot, and kept working and tideling for an opening, but Johnny stood well to his guard. At last Bill broke ground and planted his left slightly. Johnny was with him, and rusturs, when the latter got down. This round lasted nine minutes, and from the stifful manner in which both fought, at all points, it was clear to the spectaors that unless a change of factics took place there was little chance of the contest being brought to a conclusion.

4. Again did each mancewre for an opening. Walker smiled, walked round his man trying at all points, and seemed at length completely puzzled; he scratched his nut, as if to stir up a riseh idea, and tried again. "Why dow't you get on his good eye, Johnny?" said a spectator. "Because fannt," asd Johnry, with a Yankee twang, adding, "you'd better come and try it yourself." At last Walker of the first plant for the problem of the problem of the problem of the problem neither seemed to have found out the other's wesk pount.

9. Mis seemed to have made up his mind to do something, and, going up to his man, commenced fiddling in a rapid manner; but this did not throw Waiker off hi guard; he waited caimily for the attack, and when i came stopped it prestify, returning a sharp smack over the left peeper. Bill then let go one, two, and was a gain beautifully patried, and Walker retaliated on the left earlayes at last succeeded in getting on to Walker's mouth and the latter got down.

10. Much caution on both sides. Johnny tried his left at Bill's good peeper, which reached its destination, and them got away, came again, and with his usual good judgment, measuring his distance, got on Bill's forehea.

They now exchanged blows in right good earnest, until they closed, and Johnny, getting well hold of his oppoment, measuring his distance, got on Bill's forebeal. They now exchanged blows in right good earnest, until they closed, and Johnny, getting well hold of his opponent, showed his superior wreatling qualities, threw him heavily, and fell on him. This round was much in favor of Welker, and the besting now came to evens.

11. Both came up blowing, Bill appearing with the bark off his chin, and all the worse for his severe fall. Johnny again les off, but Bill broke away. In this round both again displayed extraordinary science; at last Bill got home his seft on Johnny's dial, and then got down. At the conclusion of this reund they had been boxing just one hour, and there was every appearance of a continuation for two more hours, for there was still but very hittle execution done on either side.

12. Bill came up cautious, and evidently seemed much actonished at the cleverness of Johnny, who put one, two, on Bill's mug, and got away laughing. Bill now led, and getting home sightly on his opponent's body he got down, Johnny stepping over him with great caution.

13. Still sparring and feinting, the men walked round led, and getting heme sightly on his oppenent's body he got dewn, Johnny stepping ever him with great caution.

13. Sisil sparring and feinting, the men walked round and round, stepping in and out, making rapid passes, and each eccasionally making neat stops. In this round Walker resorted to Bill's game of rubbing himself, and Hayes turned the tables upon him by trying on the same dodge that Walker had attempted upon him. He was more successful than Johony, and got home sharply on the next four rounds there was really nothing calling for comment. The exhibition o' skill was truly wonderful, and doubtless, so the lovers of downright milling, was somewhat tedious. Neither could get on, and in each round Hayes went down to avoid, Walker winking to his friends, as much as to say it was all right.

18. Johnny made play, and got home on Bill's left ear, and as he delivered the blow, trod on Bill's left foot, who jumped sway imping; Johnny, like Bill, asked pardon, and Bill planted his left well on Johnny's conk, and then getting another on to his mouth, he got down. (Cheers lee Hayee.)

19. Bill led off, and catching Johnny on the mouth, broke away without a return. He came again, got on to the nut, and alipped down quick as thought.

20 to 25. The same mode of fighting was pursued by Hayes, whose deliveries, however, were mild in the extreme. He got down in the first three, but the last round Johnny silped down himself accidentally, in consequence of the ground becoming very slippery.

24. They had now been at it an hour and a half, and to all appearance were little more marked than they would have been in a sparring bout. It was pretty clear that there was me chance of a finish, and the interest began to subside among all except the lovers of good generalship and cleave tactics. This was a long and tedious bout, and it was clear the cold had seized upon Hayes, who was no longer as lively as before. True, he got in a little one now and then, from his superior length, but there was me steam, and scarce a mark was mad in the 25th and 20th sounds nothing was done, and Hayes was down.

27. Walker once mere went boldly to work, got Hayes close to the ropes, delivered his right on the check, and Rill got down.

28. Bill, shivering and shaking, couldn't get warm, his legs were eridently cramped, and he was anything but consfortable; etil he came determined to the scratch tenated, fixes let fly his left, which was admirably stopped. Walker attempted his return, but, quick as he was Hayes was away. Johany followed bim up, and Bill nailing him at the bedy, shyped down. An appeal was made that the half gone town without a blow, but the referred decline it, was accidental; he, however, cautioned Hill to be carried, and the bettle proceeded.

29. After slight exchanges, in which nothing was done, Walker grip hold of theyes once more, and threw him beautifully, a severa all.

30. Notice was lock in getting to work. Walker crept in, and let us he right on the best work. Walker crept in, and let us he right on the best proceeded.

31. Notice was lock in getting to work. Walker crept in, and let us his right on the bedy, but it was short. Bill then append in his left twice on Johany's mouth, a pretty dealed but without steam. Walker followed him into his serner, histing him left and right, but have was done down to get into difficulty, and in the end both fell degether.

31. Hayes, although all colors from the cold, came up milling, put in another neat double on the mouth, and got down.

31. Hayes, although all colors are somethy, and mulling, put in another next double on the mouth, and got down.

22. Bill ence more led off on Johnny's smorter, but, as a small without force, when Johnny, like lightning, sent on the left in return on the forehead, completely staggering there, whe reterated a stop and fell heavily.

33. The blow in the last round enceuned to have done but little mischief to Bill, who came up smiling, but determined. The first has a senationally as at the beginning, and, even the stage of the minutes, and was as delightful a display of order than faction and was as delightful a display of order than faction and was as delightful a display of order than faction at the first few rounds, and had it not been such a piercingly cold day, would, no doubt, have been thoroughly enjoyed by every one. Over and over again, did each try all he knew. They gathered the matiges up for mischief, and each would go resolutely in, amidst exclamations of "Now they're at it;" but it was no go, each found his opponent too formidable, and not an inch of advantage cound either gain. At last a few harmless passes with the gain and Hayes got harmless passes with the gain and Hayes got in the property of the property of the gain was an except the gain and they got the gain was an except the gain and they are an except the gain and they are an except the gain and they are an except the gain at the other than a got down.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

There was not much change in the stock market to-cay. The upward movement noticed in the early part of last week did not last but a day or two. Since the tendency has been decidedly downward, and stocks of all kinds have pressed for sale. Erie, Reading and Nicaragua Transit have all been put on the market in large quantities, and sold at lower prices. Some of the Western rail-road stocks have been in demand at higher rates. Galena and Chicago is firmly held at tip-top figures, and Milwaukie and Mississippi (which is Galena and Chicago No. 2,) has been in demand at rapidly improving prices. There are quite a number of buyers of this stock in the market, but it runs up so fast as to keep just ahead of their ideas. We predict that they will all buy at still higher rates. Two or three per cent advance is nothing aspher raies. I wo or three per cent advance is nothing for such a stock. A few weeks since it was selling at 84 a 85 per cent, dividend on. The dividend since declared is five per cent in cash and seven per cent in stock, and shares are now selling at 80 per cent, dividend off. A few weeks hence it will be in better demand at ninety per cent than it is now at eighty per cent. Michigan Central was without change to-day. The bears are taking advantage of present high prices to put out contracts. Reading sold to some extent to-day at prices current on Saturday. No one yet knows anything about the divi-dend, but some are doomed to sad disappointment. The bears seem to be regardless of what it may be. They un-doubtedly believe that the stock will fall off to the extent outstedly believe that the stock will half of to the extent of the dividend at least. In this they may be mistaken. Erie drags along heavily. It opened heavy this morning, but improved slightly before the close. New York Cen-tral is neglected. A few shares are sold daily in odd lots, tral is neglected. A few shares are sold daily in odd lots, and the stock is evidently becoming concentrated. Small holders can do so much better in other railroad securities, that they are making the change, in the aggregate, to a considerable extent. Cumberland has gone back, perhaps to take a new and better start. It will probably come up when all the other fancies do. Harlem is gradually, but steadily, settling down. When the preferred took salls at thirty five new cent, it cannot be very diffistock sells at thirty-five per cent, it cannot be very diffi-cult to figure out the value of the old issue. At the first board to-day Nicaragua Transit fell off % per cent; Har-lem, %; Hudson River Railroad, %; Michigan Southern, %. There was a sale of Northern Indiana (Gushen bonds)

out. New York Central fell off % per cent; Eric, %; Har-lem, %; Hudson River Railroad, 2; Michigan Southern, lem, %; Hudson River Railroad, 2; Michigan Southern, %; Fanama, %; Galena and Chicago, %; Cleveland and Toledo, %. The firmest stock on the list was Milwaukie and Mississippi Railroad. After the board, sales were made at 81 per cent, buyer 30 days, and that price was offered for 500 shares more.

It will be seen from the following, which we copy from the Austin State Gazette of the 22d ultimo, that the fate of the Texas debt bill is still a matter of great uncertainty. "At present there is an apparent majority of six against the bill in the lower house of the State Legisagainst the bill in the lower house of the State Legis-lature:—

The debate upon the Texas debt bill was brought to a close on Weenescay last in the House of Representatives, when the vote upon the engrossment of the bill was taken, and resulted—yeas 40, mays 46. Mr. West, of Traver, a friend of the bill, vosed no for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. Mr. Tarver immediately moved a reconsideration, declaring, at the same time, his intention to vote against the reconsideration. The friends of the bill, by moving a call of the House, &c., prevented the vote being taken upon the motion on Wednesday. On Thursday, upon motion of Mr. Tarver, the motion to reconsider the vote was postponed until the 15th of February next. The fate of the measure is still uncertain.
